ABOUT THE SESSION

According to Dr. Abhishek, in addition to the symptoms of Covid -19 and according to the results of studies on COVID-19 patients, different types of skin manifestations have been seen in a number of patients. The skin involvement in patients with COVID-19 was not noticed at the early stages of this pandemic, but it has received much more attention recently. The most important skin manifestations in people with COVID-19 are red spots on the hands, blisters on the trunk, and itchy hives. In some COVID-19 patients, red patches of itchy skin, associated with skin inflammation, have been observed as well. These lesions affect the hands and feet and may look like small, swollen, itchy blisters (15). Despite the observation of skin manifestations in patients with COVID-19, researchers are still looking for answers to the question of whether these skin presentations are directly related to the virus itself or are complications of the infection.

OBJECTIVES

- Skin manifestations may be considered as a potential factor in the diagnosis and isolation criteria for COVID-19 patients and help to begin the treatment as soon as possible.

CONCLUSION

According to the results, skin manifestations in COVID-19 patients are very diverse and can occur at the beginning of the disease or after antibiotic treatment. Based on our results, skin manifestations including erythematous lesions, rash, and urticaria were the most commonly reported among patients with COVID-19. Identifying these skin manifestations can be a quick way to diagnose some COVID-19 patients. As a result, the importance of this issue is to help stop the spread of COVID-19 and protect other people. In addition to the importance of the side effects of COVID-19, the importance of drug interactions during supportive therapy should also be considered. As a final conclusion, physicians can consider skin manifestations as important clinical features in the diagnosis of patients with COVID-19. However, further study and investigation is needed to confirm and explain an understanding of COVID-19-related skin manifestations.
