About the session

The workshop was conducted on 16-11-2018, at Aryabhata hall room no. 205, the workshop focused on “Common Disease”. Microorganisms as etiologic agents of chronic diseases that contribute to substantial mortality and morbidity. This session examines definitive and emerging associations between infectious agents and chronic diseases with a range of pathogenic mechanisms and diversity in etiologic microbes. The review will explore advances in research, detection, and screening that have contributed to these discoveries and some of the challenges that remain.

Session 1 discussed the Case Studies of Infectious Agents Associated with Chronic Diseases and session 2 discussed the Challenges in Framing the Research. Session 3 discussed Barriers and Opportunities to Detect, Prevent, and Mitigate the Impact of Chronic Diseases Caused by Infectious Agents

The session ended with all the panel members and audience Panel members, Forum members, and the audience comments on and respond to considerations such as the role of industry in developing diagnostics; possibilities for the coordination between basic and clinical scientists, pathologists, and epidemiologists in developing standardized specific case definitions and specimens and the development of comparable methods of analysis; the lessons that can be learned about the microbes from the chronic sequelae they produce; and methods for funding the research.
