- ✓ Increases ability to influence practice

3. Components of publication ethics:

The participants imbibe the component of publication ethics in detail on the points below.

- ✓ Ethics review/breach of confidentiality
 - Ethics approval for research with human subjects or animals
 - Informed consent/Age appropriate assent
 - Data confidentiality
- ✓ Falsification and Fabrication
 - If research is not generated by your research (fabrication) or if it is generated by manipulation of data (falsification)
 - Have to retain data for a relatively long period
- ✓ Authorship
 - Confers credit, implies responsibility and accountability of the published work
 - Each author should be clear about their responsibility
 - It is mandatory to declare the contribution of each author
 - Decide on the authorship at the outset
- ✓ Plagiarism
 - Use of previously published manuscript by someone for their manuscript or unreferenced use of others' published or unpublished work without consent, credit or acknowledgement.
 - Most common is 'copy-paste' – write the concept in your own words
 - Use software tools – Turnitin and many more
- ✓ Ethics related to submission
 - Simultaneous submission
 - Duplicate submission
 - Self-citation
 - Predatory journals (UGC CARE)

✓ Conflict of Interest

- Financial, personal, social or other interest that directly or indirectly influences the conduct of the author with respect to the manuscript
- Disclose the conflict of interest

4. Checklist for publication ethics

The overall or final checklist of publication ethics is discussed here

- ✓ Approval and consent
- ✓ Data accuracy, falsification and fabrication
- ✓ Plagiarism and self-plagiarism

DESCRIPTION

The session is one of the most important parts of an academic career. The discourse and discussion in this session lighted up thoughts and minds in a deeper sense. This session mainly focused on the ethical issues of publication as an academician.

Prof. Pattanayak discusses the literal meaning of ‘publication ethic’, where publication is disseminating knowledge to the public and ethics is its authentic moral value. It can be concluded as the publication of one’s research work with authenticity. Throughout her lecture, the speaker focuses on the ethics an academician should have while researching until the work is published. She gives many examples of unauthentic publications and works that an academician should avoid.

The present-day witnesses the increase of unethical research work, but an academician must abide by authentic research works, starting from choosing the research topic, problem identification, objectives, methodologies, and framing the work till it is published.

Publishing academic work not only helps exchange knowledge with others but also gives career benefits and shares different world views with others. It collaborates in building more knowledge of the subject.

A researcher should follow proper values while doing research and publication. People involved in the research should be appropriately recognised, and ideas taken must be properly cited to avoid plagiarism. Falsification and fabrication in any way should be avoided because the outcome and result of the hard work might be void. Self-plagiarism is also one of the most important things academicians should avoid.

CONCLUSION

A researcher must do authentic research and be honest while publishing his/her research work. The author must acknowledge all the help s/he received in publishing their work. S/he should avoid plagiarism; if others' ideas are used, they must be appropriately cited and mentioned from where they are taken. Publication ethics is one of the vital parts of being an academician.
